

Folsom Offers Variety of Fish

By JAMES K. WOODWORTH
Folsom Lake, a few miles east of Sacramento and one of the top drawing cards in the state's system of angling lakes, probably offers a wider variety of fish species to the state's fishermen than any other single body of water.

A check in 1966, which was verified again in 1968, showed that during the period checked by fish and game officials, anglers caught 44 rainbow trout, ranging from 15 to 16 inches; 285 kokanee of the 10- to 14-inch range; 107 bass which were split about evenly between small and largemouth species, and a combination of 174 catfish, bluegill, perch and other small fish.

A few trash fish, such as carp and suckers, occasionally get themselves hooked and give the anglers a thrill boatside and see that their "lunker" is a useless trash fish.

Kokanee is the dominant species and the 10- to 14-inch size is rated as larger than at most other state reservoirs. The bass have also reached their peak with about half of them being caught each year.

Fish and game officials indicated the catfish and the perch-bluegill population of Folsom Lake is one which has not been exploited enough by the state's anglers. They have opened up the lake for night catfishing in order to build up the fish take for these very tasty fish.

The catfish and bluegill species are looked down upon by the trout angler and as a result the population of this type of fish in Folsom is getting quite large.

Catfishing takes a special technique which few anglers have learned. Patience and knowledge of the catfish habits are necessary to gain a good catch, and those who do angle for this tasty fish find that a large "cat" caught on light tackle can give one heck of a battle.

Plans for the fishery at the new Oroville Reservoir call for a variety something like that available at Shasta Dam. Shasta has about the same variety as Folsom
